Washington, May 16-The Central Intelligence Agency, the sacred cow of executive bureaus, is about to be forced in a little on Capitol Hill.

The CIA has enjoyed almost complete freedom since its inception in 1947. Capitol Hill has been sympathetic to its plea that if too many people knew what it is doing, it would have to stop doing it.

The change in sentiment, reflected in a Senate Foreign Relations Committee vote last week, is due, apparently, more to CIA's misadventures abroad.

agent.
"Why is the CIA mixed up in Estonian groups?" asks Sen. McCarthy, "If they are infiltrated by Communist what difference does it make?'

Sen. McCarthy, an outspoken opponent of the late Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy, says, "We more or less accept the fact that morality and integrity stop att he water's edge. But when you see the same rule applying at home, it's the time to call a halt."

The CIA has also made a host of enemies on American campuses since it contracts with; various universities have been made public.

Sen. McCarthy opposed the confirmation of former Atomic Energy Commission Chairman John McCone as director of the CIA in 1962 on a point of academic freedom.

. He charged that McCone, who was confirmed, had attempted to bring about the firing of 10 California Institute of Technology professors who publicly supported Adlai Stevenson's 1956 appeal for a nuclear test-ban.

The McCarthy resolution, which would create a new body including three members of Foreign Relations, will almost inevitably be viewed as yet another confrontation between the White House and Capitol Hill.

Ten years ago, when Sen. Mike Mansfeld, of Montana, now the majority leader, vainly proposed a joint committee to oversee the CIA, he warned of "A trend toward more and more power in the hands of the executive branch of the government and less and less power in the legislative."

"As time passes," said Sen. Mansfield in 1956, "Congress will" be less of an equal brancha nd more power will rest in the hands of the executive."

Everyone agrees that if that were true in the Eisenhower administration it is 10 times as Johnson.
